WHAT'S THE BIG IDEA?

STORY:

The stories that we tell, retell, and cherish focus our identities. Stories help us reflect, make meaning, and relate our experiences to others. Sharing our stories helps us to build compassion and empathy for others' ways of knowing and being. Some stories stay with us, some we let go of, some become more "ripe" and worthy of consideration over time. Moreover, in the telling of stories we are able to understand the ways in which our past intersects with our present. Storyteller Rebecca Solnit reflects, I like to see the long line we each leave behind, and I sometimes imagine my whole life that way, as though each step was a stitch, as though I was a needle leaving a trail of thread that sewed together the world as I went by, criss-crossing with other's paths, quilting it all together in some way that matters even though it can hardly be traced. (Solnit, 2013, p. 131)
